ACKNOWLEDGMENTS TO THE SECOND EDITION

Many people helped to bring out this second edition very quickly. For those who also helped on the first edition, your names appear in bold type.

First our interviewees who squeezed us into impossibly busy schedules: Robin Abrams, Ventro; David Anderson, SETI; Keoki Andrus, The Launch Group; Tom Botts, Shell U.K.; Russ Baird, General Electric; Joe Bonito, Pfizer Pharmaceuticals; Harry Brown, EBC Industries; Phil Carroll, Fluor Corporation; Russ Conser, Shell Technology Ventures; David Gensler, Gensler; Steve Glovinsky, UNDP; Meta Greenberg; Al Gilman; Loree Goffigon, Gensler; Terry Heng, Motorola; Mike Howland, Applied Knowledge Group, Inc.; Hank McKinnell, Pfizer, Inc., Bart Piepers, Concept-international; Linda Pierce, recently of Shell Oil Company; Howard Rheingold; Dennis Roberson, Motorola; David Sibbett, Grove Associates; Tom Steffens, U.S. Special Operations Command; Bob Stone, Public Strategies Group; Marcel Storm, Concept-international; John Whyte, Ernst & Young International; Gary Wheeler, Perkins & Will; and Carol Willett, Applied Knowledge Group, Inc.

Sun Microsystems receives its own paragraph for offering “graceful” virtual responses in Internet time: Sandy Belknap, Suzie Grace, Ed Hoff, Scott Johnson, Jim Lynch, John McEvoy, Al Ormiston, Peter Pazmany, Daniel Poon, Terry Sheridan, Linda Short, and Adrienne Whitmore, and Lynda Kaye of Ketchum Thomas.

Likewise Buckman Labs, where Bob Buckman, Steve Buckman, Sheldon Ellis, Dean Didato, Mark Koskienemi, Tim Meek, Drew Mohler, Edsen Peredo, and Alison Tucker all participated in interviews that Barbara McConville arranged.

Three of our clients have given us opportunities to test these ideas in real time: Shell, where we have had the privilege of working with the “gifted class,” led by Tom Botts and Linda Pierce, along with Carolyn Yapp and Tom Kunz; at Pfizer Central Research Group, where Jim McCarthy introduced us to Linda Benner, Glenn Gross, Eric Erickson, and Simon Rhodes; and General Electric, where Russ Baird and our colleague Steve Schoonover of Schoonover Associates have worked side by side with us to adapt the work to that culture.

Thanks to the miracle of e-mail, a number of fast typers answered questions almost immediately: Jay Albany, Kozmo.com; Peter Bues-seler, Brian Stenquist and Terri Yearwood of Minnesota Department of Natural Resources; John Kamensky, National Performance Review; Stewart Brand; Sture Karlsson, TetraPak; John Lawrence, UNDP; Will Hutsell and Nancy Ledford, Eastman Chemical Company; Robert Gilman, Context Institute; Allegra Fuller Snyder and Jaime Snyder, Buckminster Fuller Institute; Frank Starmer; Timm Esque; Steve Kelman; William A. Himmelsbach, VHA Metro; Richard Huntington and Ralf Maurer, Results Management Services; Diane Lesner and Mohan Kumar, Motorola; Oonagh Butler; Pfizer; Diane Wright, Ernst & Young International; and Darren Roberts, Gensler. We also appreciate the help of Henrik Bendix, Doug Engelbart, Leon Navickas of Centra, and AnnaLee Saxenian.

Steve Teicher, with whom we explored these ideas at Apple, and Bernie DeKoven, a pioneer in virtual work, get special awards for interviewing themselves online.

Lisa Kimball, Caucus Systems, receives a paragraph of her own. An old friend and colleague whom two of our interviewees name as the “greatest networker” they know, Lisa’s ability to connect people and ideas is brilliant.

Peter Wiley opened doors once again, introducing us to key interviewees. Reuben Harris, Naval Postgraduate School, remains a trusted adviser.

Patricia Nelson and Ike Williams, our agents at Palmer and Dodge, with help from Hope Denekamp, make the book contracting process easy. Jeanne Glasser is our editor again, guiding us through the work ways of our venerable publisher, John Wiley & Sons.

Christine Furry, North Market Street Graphics, made book production easy. Thank you, Chris.

Anthony Antonuccio; Dan Bathon; Scott Benson; Bob Buckman; Adam Crescenzi; Jon Fleischmann, Frank Andryauskas, and BagelNet; David Haber; Tim Kilcoyne; Eric Lipnack; Jack and Mary Merselis; Mike Schield; Jay Riley; Ross Whiting; and, particularly, Bruce Bedford, said yes to our company at exactly the right moments for this book.

Our friends and family, Rosalind and Jake Joffe; Emily LaMont and Jean Nichols of The Jane Gang; Sylvia Nasar; Linda Russell; Judy Smith; Susan Stamps; Ron and Cathy Cordes; and Kate and Ben Taylor all have done their parts, too.

We are blessed with our colleagues at NetAge: Don Arnoudse, who cofounded NetAge with us, Jennifer Chambers, Keith Ehrlich, Kate Harper, Dan Kaplan, Carrie Kuempel, Jeff Schriesheim, and Annie Marascia, whose name not only belongs in bold but in bright lights for the many hours she has put in bringing this book to a close. This is the fourth time Annie's been part of a book with us, and the first that she's led support. Impeccable work, Annie. Karl Grossner, Lisa Schiffman, and Celia Wiley all contributed to NetAge in ways that made writing this book much easier. And Bill and Pam Johnson, early and longtime supporters of our work, remain in our lives, making connections.

Finally, bows to our daughters, Eliza and Miranda, yet again, now completely grown. This book's publication marks Miranda's graduation from college and Eliza's entrance into her senior year. The Acknowledgments of our books record your life progressions that bring inexpressible joy and love from your very proud parents.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS TO THE FIRST EDITION

A book is a complex project. We have been blessed with the help of many people who are our colleagues in trying to understand the new organizational phenomenon of virtual teams.

Jim Childs, our editor and publisher on our last two books and our publisher once again on this one, was the first to express interest in the book. This long collaboration continues to inspire us. Jeanne Glasser, our editor, has been an enthusiastic source of energy and encouragement. Publishing with the nearly two-centuries-old John Wiley & Sons is an honor.

Reuben Harris, chair of the Department of Systems Management at the Naval Postgraduate School and a dear friend, gave us early and invaluable guidance on how to approach this topic. Bob Buckman of Buckman Laboratories calls Reuben “America’s best-kept business secret.” Perhaps we can help put an end to that secret.

A group of devoted people took the time to line edit the manuscript for no reason other than that the topic interests them. They are the kinds of friends everyone wants. Their hard-hitting queries caused us to write a better book: Kathi Albertini, Frank Alla, Rick Berenson, Don Brown, Curt Crosby, Bernie DeKoven, David Paeper, Pete Rogers, Caryn Siegel, Gary Wheeler, and Peter Wiley. This was the second time Kathi and Frank provided this service to us. And Frank did triple duty—we also interviewed him for the book, as we did Curt, Bernie, and Gary. David and Caryn generously volunteered from afar. Pete, a member of our extended family, did such an extraordinary job as an editor that he may have yet another career in his future. Peter went far beyond the call of duty. Abiding thanks to all of you.

Cathy and Ron Cordes, colleagues and dear friends, were unwavering in one commitment. Weekend after weekend during the book's writing, they made sure that we ate at least one very delicious meal. They also made us laugh. We use their wonderful product TeamFlow in all our projects. Judy Smith, another extended family member, called innumerable times to ask how it was going, as she has on all our books. For nearly 20 years, she has housed us when we visit our publisher.

As part of our research for this book, we interviewed 75 people. We thank them for the time they took to carefully consider the complex questions that face organizations when people work across boundaries:

Another group provided help in connecting us with our interviewees: Calvin Colbert, Voluntary Hospitals of America; Rod Cox and Lynn Swartzlander, Executive Forum; George Brennan, Bob Farkas, Debbie Moore, and Lola Signom, NCR Corporation; Patricia Fiske, Worldwide Partners; Alex Kleinman, The Advisory Board Company; Bahman Kia and Jose Cruz-Osorio, United Nations Development Programme; Barbara McConville, Buckman Laboratories; Tony Pribyl, Men's Health; and Patricia Sutton and Nancy Ledford, Eastman Chemical Company.

Annie Marascia, who has lived through three books with us, has been tireless—a sophomore in high school when she started with us, she is now a sophomore in college. Lorie Schwenk has been a talented research assistant.

Nancy Marcus Land at Publications Development Company of Texas has made this book's production a virtual team dream.

Marion Metcalf and Lisa Kimball provided key insights as they both did on our last book. Thank you, sisters. Al Gilman was an early and perceptive contributor to the ideas.

Our clients and their organizations are where we learn the most. We are especially grateful to Steve Teicher and Pam Martin at Apple for many hours spent on various continents exploring virtual teams in practice. Gail Snowden of First Community Bank/BankBoston and Heather Stoneback of Rodale Press have taught us things we could only know by learning about their organizations. We are also grateful to our many friends at Steelcase, including Bill Miller, Doug Parker, and Kyle Williams. Steelcase makes it possible for virtual teams to work together. Our 15-year connection with The Calvert Group has taught us how values sustain virtual teams. Our colleagues with whom we organized “MassNet: Collaboration for the Commonwealth” showed our local community what can happen when diverse organizations decide to cooperate.

Finally, as has been the case with all our books, our daughters, Liza and Miranda, are the point of it all. Having lived with these ideas since they were born, they know more than anyone.
